be would, of course, govern the value of both grain and flour raised and manufactured in the country. Now, if our agricultural friends think that by forming a "co-operative society," they could promote their interthey not by a similar organization better serve their interests in the matter of a flour mill? It would, of course, require a larger amount of capital to accomplish the latter object than it would the former, but it would also very much more largely promote their personal interests, and pay a larger rate of interest on the capital so invested. We have no doubt if the farming community were to take this matter earnestly in band, they Carriage Makel would be supported in it by others, as an enterprise in which money is to be made. A good grist mill could scarcely fail of being a profitable enterprise to those who hold stock in it, and particularly to farmers. A capital Is prepared to build IA 70 3/1 would probably be ample to set the thing in motion, and that amount we should suppose the farmers in the surrounding districts could easily raise among themselves without of every description. any assistance from outsiders. Such an enterprise we bonestly believe would do more Reparing done cheaper than by to promote the farming interests in this section of country than any other thing we know The subject is an important one, and we leave it for the present to the consideration

He will submit the whole matter to ever be that she sprang from such a source.

(Applause.) Mr. Goldwin Smith, who, on rising to re spond, was received with loud applause, said there was a little French story, the moral of which seemed not inapplicable to that occasion. Once upon a time there was an old gentleman of great wealth, who possessed one daughter, for whose hand there were two suiters. The whole party went to Switzerland, and one of the suitors having the good fortune to save the old gentleman's life man to save his life, and by giving the father the gratifying opportunity of doing a heroic deed, wins the daughter. (Laughter.) The moral he would draw from this was that it was more advantageous to receive benefits than to confer them, and in his case he was conscious he had received more benefits than has just completed a six months' term, and conscious he had received more benefits than he had conferred. An English newspaper had spoken of him as being in exile, and he felt inclined to write to the editor informing him terview with the Superintendent of Indian any on earth. (Applause.) The Superintendent had stated ceived a letter from an English lady asking that if the City Council deemed it advisable him if he had become a Yankee, and if so, to order all Iudians out of the city at a cer-tain hour in the evening, he would see that proper care and provisions were made for it was not so much to do honor, however, to him, that they had met there that evening as to mark an advance in the national sentiment of Canada. An English friend had observed to him a few days ago that it was exceedingly gratifying to see how attached the Canadians were to England; and that here nobody spoke about Canada. He (Mr. Smith), might have said in answer to this that the homage of Canada was worth little or nothing to England. He (Mr. Smith), however, told him that his observa

It was desired that Canada should have a monthly magazine and a meeting was held at a comparatively recent date at which it was resolved that one should be started. Fortunately publishers were found who were willing to sacrifice something for the literary honor of the nation, notwithstanding that they had lost by a similar venture previously. He thought that they stated in their programme that there bappened to be unusual was, that they had the good forture to find in a community like this a literary loafer. (Laughter.)
